WALL STREET COERCION. HOW THE DESIDENT IS CHOSEN HOW THE PRESIDENT IS CHOSEN.

The president and vice president of the United States are choser by officials termed "Electors" in each Strite, who are, under existing laws, hosen by the qualified voters thereof by ballot, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in every fourth year preceding the year is which the presidential term expires.

The constitution of the United States precribes that each State shall "appoint," in such manner as the legislature thereof may street, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the State may be entitled in congress; but no senator or represeniative or person holding an oface of trust under the United States shall he an elector. The constitution requires that the day when electors are chosen shall be the same throughout the United States At the beginning of our government most of the electors were chosen by the legislatures of their respective States, the people having no direct participation in their choice; and one State, South Carolina, continued that practice down to the breaking out of the civil war. But in all the States aw the electors are, under the directon of State laws, chosen by the people on a general State ticket.

The manner in which the chosen electors poet and ballot for a president and vice president of the United States is provided for in article XII. of the constitution, and is as follows:

"The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for president and vice president, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as president, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as vice president; and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as president, and of vil persons voted for as vice president, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit, scales, to the sett of government of the United States, directed to the president of the senate." The same article then prescribes the mode in which the congress shall count the ballots of the electors, and announce the result thereof, which

"The president of the senate shall, in the presence of the senate and house of representatives, open al the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for president shall be president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as presider, the house of representatives shall choose immediate, by ballot, the ballot, the president. But in choosing the president the votes shall be aken by States, the representatives from each State having one vote; / quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the house of representatives shall not choose a president, wherever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the vice president shall act as president, as in the case of death or other constitutional disability of the president. The person having the greatest number of votes as vice president shall be the vice president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list the senate shall choose the vier president, a quorum for the purpose shall consist of twothirds of the whole number of senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice."

The procedure of the two houses, in case the returns of the election of electors from any State are disputed, is provided in the "Electoral Count" not, passed by the Forty-ninth congress. The act directs that the presidentral electors shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January noti following their election. It fixes the time when congress shall be in bession to count the ballots as the second Wednesday in February succeeding the meeting of the electors.

The constitution also defines who is eligible for president of the United States, as follows:

"No person except a natural born citizen or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this constitution shall be eligible to the office of president; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty-five years."

The qualifications for vice president are the same.
